- On 12.09.2023, on the website of the UNDP, it was stated that the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) released new research that shows securing the wellbeing of people and planet too often hangs in the balance of fiscal and financial constraints. According to that, developed in collaboration with 95 developing countries ahead of the UN Sustainable Development Summit, the analysis – “SDG Insights”, which comprises 95 separate reports - reveals that the default growth trajectories of most developing economies face hard fiscal and financial constraints that skew them towards carbon intensive and non-inclusive outcomes. Countries recovering from recent shocks and crises are trapped in a cycle that pulls them away from the goals set out by the 2030 Development Agenda. After three years of concurrent crises, including a severe debt crisis that crowds out investment in social protection and energy transitions, developing countries are trapped in relentless pursuit of economic growth. Under current trends, the default growth trajectory for most developing countries is showing further turmoil in one or more of the economic, social, political and environmental spheres.

According to the given information in news, the exhibition is located in the visitor lobby of the building, where world leaders from the 193 UN Member States will walk through on their way to the 78th General Assembly on September 18-19. The exhibition features first person messages from over 100 countries and provides world leaders with a unique opportunity to hear firsthand the voices of those most affected by climate change. The video messages reveal the direct impacts of climate change on people's lives and their desire to see real change enacted by governments. There are messages of anxiety, anger, frustration, and fear, but also messages of hope, and, most importantly, calls for action in this living archive. Approximately a quarter of the videos are from the African continent.
